Photography, plus field duty, can be fun

By Gerry Wilson

Have you ever thought of taking your camera to the field? No! Not to snap a deuce under a net or your buddy with his TA-50, but to catch some of the life and beauty in the forest.

Forests were not planted in order that the Signal Corps could put up 140 foot towers to communicate, they were planted for photographers and artists.

There's nothing like the rays of the setting sun turning the forest into an oil painting in light, or the sight of a Red Squirrel clinging to the side of a tree. Did you ever watch a family of rabbits playing through the grass or look at the early morning dew hanging on a spiders web with the sun shining through the water drops?.

Take a walk along a forest trail or beside a rushing stream and you can capture the type of picture you see on postcards. Wherever you are there's plenty to photograph if you just look for it. So grab your camera, blow the dust off, and get shooting.
